Fortune-AEI's Pinto-21st Century ROAD to Housing Act is 'Effectively ROAD to Killing Billions in Investments' Likely to Shrink Housing Supply. Beyond MHARR-Dozens of Groups Oppose Bill. FEA

At Davos 2026, President Donald J. Trump said in part: "We will not become a nation of renters" as he announced a ban on institutional investors buying single family housing. Ed Pinto, director of the American Enterprise Institute's (AEI) Housing Center and former chief credit officer at Fannie Mae, told Fortune recently: "The Senate bill [is] a textbook example of the law of unintended consequences." "To be sure, America is short by multiple millions of houses. But ROAD is effectively the road to killing billions in investment that is often delivering what backers of the Act say they want: More homes—newly upgraded to boot—put up for sale," wrote Shawn Tully for Fortune. Citing among Tully's sources for Fortune was the AEI Housing Center's Edward "Ed" Pinto, J.D. Tully stated: "Given the damage [MA-D Senator Elizabeth] Warren and other advocates claim that own-to-rent is inflicting on potential homeowners, it's surprising to learn that the industry's total portfolio amounts to around 800,000 properties—approximately 1% of all existing homes in the U.S. Still, Pinto points out that the industry's plays in extremely important part on bringing on new supply "at the margin." While each of them may have good intentions, as the notable maxim proclaims: "The road to hell is paved with good intentions." Variations on that dictum are attributed to Saint Bernard of Clairvaux \(12th century\), John Ray \(1670\), and Samuel Johnson \(1775\). Good intentions can come from sources on the left, center, or right. What is often missing in such discussions is something at or near the root cause for the housing crisis. That would be the lack of inherently affordable manufactured homes. As this facts-evidence-analysis (FEA) will demonstrate anew is that a key missing metaphorical Jenga piece are the millions of HUD Code manufactured homes that were not built in the 21st century which has a ripple effect of consequences (see Tables 1 and 2).

1. As the article dated 4.10.2026 linked here stated the following data points. The tabulations by MHProNews used MS Excel and were based on official data as cited by the Manufactured Housing Association for Regulatory Reform \(MHARR\), Institute for Building Technology and Safety \(IBTS\), MH Merchandiser, Manufactured Housing Institute \(MHI\).

2. Also, from the article linked here, that roughly 6-million-unit deficit of manufactured housing units not built in the 21st century is the same figure that prominent MHI member Cavco Industries (CVCO) has cited for home many housing units are needed in the U.S. From a prior Cavco Investor Relations (IR) pitch shown below on "Why it matters," "Nationwide impact with approximately 6 million housing unit deficit."

CAVCO INDUSTRIES, INC. | NASDAQ: CVCO

Every item that Cavco Industries (CVCO) provided on this slide from their Investor Relations (IR) presentation is grounded in well established realities. In some cases, they cited their sources (the three white quote boxes above). The Jerry Howard quote has also been verified. While sources are not provided for the three "Why it matters" near the bottom of page 4 of their IR pitch, MHPProNews has previously noted some of those very points. The shortage of 6 million housing units may be too low. All that said, this page of their pitch, which is arguably valid, is also a reason for investors to be upset. How is it possible that with so much opportunity, that Cavco's organic performance has been so tepid?

Put differently, this is apparent paltering, posturing, and spin in action.

3. Gemini put the common range of estimated housing units needed between 4 or 5 to 8+ million and stressed that the lack of manufactured housing has played a pivotal role in the current affordable housing crisis.

4. In fairness, when a source cites a fact or statistic, there is routinely a range of things not said by that same source on that same or other topics. For example, AEI's Pinto has previously stated to MHProNews his support for HUD Code manufactured housing. He didn't mention manufactured housing, or at least did not get quoted by Fortune's Tully about manufactured housing, in the specific instance of the article cited here and above.

[caption id="attachment_169278" align="aligncenter" width="651"]

"My views have not changed. Simply stated:

- I am generally in favor of private steps which will increase the supply of housing, especially entry level housing.
- This includes manufactured housing.
- Accomplishing increased supply can generally best be accomplished by the government (all levels) getting out of the way.
- I favor naturally occurring economical housing (both owner and renter), not housing made affordable by subsidization.
- I am not in favor of policies that subsidize and thus promote debt.

- I am concerned about rent seeking by manufactured housing companies. The benefits of extending and expanding federally guaranteed financing to manufactured housing would provide access to 30 year loan terms (a significant increase compared to what is available today) or providing access to lower GSE or Ginnie rates (a significant decline over what is currently available). Such credit easing gets capitalized into higher prices, the benefits of which would largely flow into the pockets of these companies in the form of higher profits and to existing homeowners in the form of higher property values.
- My first and foremost concern is increasing the supply of economical housing for entry-level buyers.
- I am not in favor of policies that ease credit during periods when supply is constrained (a seller's market).
  - Such credit easing gets capitalized into higher prices.
- I am in favor of policies that assist in wealth building.

In some respects, Pinto's reasoning cited in his remarks shown above is similar to the application of the economic thinking cited in the report below.

5. It is no secret that MHProNews and MHLivingNews are pro-manufactured housing 'done correctly.' But MHProNews has repeatedly noted that the free market should be allowed to work properly. Meaning, other safe forms of housing should not be improperly blocked or thwarted.

6. While some of President Trump's remarks on housing have arguably been tinged with populist rhetoric, in fairness, his executive orders last month could prove useful to HUD Code manufactured housing. To some extent, the president also appears to recognize the need for more manufactured homes.

7. Back to Tully's article for Fortune.

Pinto also notes that ROAD awards alarmingly broad power to the Secretary of the Treasury. “It states that the Secretary can essentially change the law almost anyway he or she wants,” he notes, “by changing the definitions in a way that that shuts off any possibility of owning these homes.”

Given the damage Warren and other advocates claim that own-to-rent is inflicting on potential homeowners, it’s surprising to learn that the industry’s total portfolio amounts to around 800,000 properties—approximately 1% of all existing homes in the U.S. Still, Pinto points out that the industry’s plays in extremely important part on bringing on new supply “at the margin.”

...

To be sure, America is short by multiple millions of houses. But [the 21st Century] ROAD [to Housing Act] is effectively the road to killing billions in investment that is often delivering what backers of the Act say they want: More homes—newly upgraded to boot—put up for sale.

The article is entitled: "The ROAD Act passed by the Senate aims to expand America’s housing supply. It’s likely to shrink it instead." Literally scores of nonprofits and other advocacy groups have weighed in with similar arguments and reasoning.
